Suspicious Network Activity Points to Serious Attack

The IT security manager for a government contractor noticed unusual alarms generated by the contractor's security software regarding one server. The company engaged bit-x-bit to investigate and determine the scope and severity of the problem.

Working around the clock, bit-x-bit's incident responders analyzed the company's server and quickly determined that the company was the target of a sophisticated cyberattack. The attack compromised a large number of computers, servers and user accounts. bit-x-bit provided detailed reports to company management and counsel on a daily basis, and assisted with defensive strategy and remediation. Our quick response and understanding of this large and complex computer network enabled the company to immediately escalate the issue with the appropriate authorities and assert control over the situation.
